Art, history and culture: two exhibitions in Rome celebrate the ties between Italy and Argentina

In an unprecedented cultural event, the Argentine Embassy in Italy is preparing to inaugurate two exhibitions in the city of Rome, as part of the activities scheduled around the chancellor's visit. Diana Mondino. These exhibitions, one dedicated to the plastic arts and the other to photography, seek to highlight and celebrate the deep historical and cultural ties that have united Italy and Argentina over the years.

The exhibitions will take place in the Casa Argentina, which is located in a building of heritage value built in the 1920s by the renowned Italian architect Gino Coppedé, on the emblematic Via Veneto, in front of Piazza Barberini. The appointment for the inauguration is set for next February 13 at 6:30 p.m., in this cultural enclave located on the second floor of the aforementioned construction.

Argentine architect and photographer Fabio Grementieri reveals his "art of building"

The first of the samples is titled Rome and Buenos Aires, joint dimensions and is by the Italian artist Davide Querin. The exhibition promises to be a visual spectacle through the arrangement of 75x75 cm oil paintings, organized in four rows of four paintings each.

This particular arrangement will allow visitors to appreciate the continuity of a work that, together, will form an impressive 300x300 cm piece. Querin, whose work is inspired by Argentine landscapes and culture, seeks with his art to build an imaginary bridge between the two capitals.

In parallel, Italy - Argentina, the art of building curated by architect and photographer Fabio Grementieri and with the collaboration of Lariviere editions, it will highlight the influence of Italian architecture in Argentina. Through photographs of emblematic buildings built by Italian architects in Argentina, the exhibition will narrate the history of architecture and urbanism that Italians and Argentines have shared, highlighting monumental works such as the Casa Rosada, the Palacio del Congreso, the Teatro Colón, the Confeitería del Molino, Pasaje Barolo, and other significant buildings in various Argentine provinces.

A special segment will be dedicated to the Techint company, exhibiting images of products and buildings that testify to the dynamism and innovation of the Italian-Argentine collaboration in the construction and engineering sector.

The Argentine Embassy invites the public to immerse themselves in this unique cultural experience, which promises to leave an indelible mark on the hearts of visitors.

Both exhibitions not only demonstrate the rich cultural and artistic exchange between Italy and Argentina, but also reaffirm the continued mutual influence that both countries exert on each other. This event stands as a celebration of brotherhood and collaboration, demonstrating that the historical ties between these two nations are as vast as they are valuable.
